Hello

Yesterday's team call left me speechless - and that doesn't happen often.

"I felt pressured into signing. I believe I was conned out of £2,000."

Those words came from a business owner who'd just escaped from another enforcement company. They echoed through our video call long after we'd hung up. Because at that moment, I realised how broken our industry has become.

This week alone, I've spoken to three other businesses with similar stories. One told me about promises that vanished faster than steam from a kettle: "They said they'd pay... then they just disappear and have a cup of tea." Another needed twenty-odd questions answered, five separate emails, and multiple phone calls before they'd even consider working with us. Can you blame them?

Here's the thing - when you've been burned by pressure tactics and empty promises, trust becomes precious. I get it. One potential client took two full weeks to decide whether to proceed with recovering £50,000 they were owed. Two weeks! Not because they didn't need the money, but because they needed to know we were different.

And we are different. Not because we say so, but because after 245 years in this business, we understand something fundamental: Trust isn't something you demand. It's something you earn, answer one question at a time.
